

Privacy Policy

Updated May 2018

Privacy and online safety are important to Innermost Ltd. This policy explains how we may collect information about you and gives certain assurances on how we use it.

Innermost collects, stores, processes and transmits data in order to provide services to customers and suppliers. This may include marketing of services, the processing of orders for customers and customer support activities, or for the purposes of conducting corporate activities such as interacting with suppliers, job applicants or administration.

By providing personal information to Innermost in any of the ways described in this policy, the subject is agreeing that they are authorised to provide this information and that they accept this privacy policy and that Innermost is permitted to process their data.

Innermost will collect information like name, address, phone number and email address either via company activity, via our website, emails, customer support, telephone, in person or at trade shows.

We will not collect sensitive personal data.

Innermost may from time to time contact customers and suppliers via email or phone regarding service related matters such as billing, product support and logistics.

We will keep this data for as long as necessary or obligated to conduct the company's activities.

Innermost will not share data with a third party not directly associated with our business.

Innermost uses appropriate security measures within our responsibility to ensure an appropriate level of confidentiality and integrity.

Please email info@innermost.net should you have a concern regarding a data security issue or possible data breach.

If you no longer wish to receive our marketing emails please click the unsubscribe link at any time.